Twenty-seven of the nation's top women artists will converge on the Hockaday Museum of Art beginning August 12 in Kalispell, Montana, for the second annual exhibition A Timeless Legacy – Women Artists of Glacier National Park. More than 75 new works that represent Glacier National Park will be available across a mixture of mediums and genres. The event will not only highlight the work of the talented female artists, but also the centennial celebration of the National Park Service.

Events begin August 12 with an invitation-only opening reception, followed by a purchase draw sale on August 13. The exhibition will also offer miniature works that will appeal to novice and seasoned collectors, offering opportunities to purchase incredible original art at reasonable prices.

New participating artists in A Timeless Legacy include

Deborah Berniklau, Shawn Cameron, Stephanie Campos, Nancy Dunlop Cawdrey, Sheila Cottrell, Lisa Danielle, Joni Falk, Deborah Fellows, Lori Forest, Linda Glover Gooch, Terry Cooke Hall, Ann Hanson, Julie Jeppsen, Krystii Melaine, Darcie Peet, Stacey Peterson, Heide Presse, Elizabeth Robbins, Sharon Standridge, Carol Swinney, Sonya Terpening, Echo Ukrainetz, and Sarah Woods. Returning artists are Carole Cooke, Kathryn Stats, Linda

Tippetts, and Rachel Warner, who were originally invited to paint Glacier National Park in the summer of 2014. The 2015 show received widespread acclaim and recognition, and eventually led to a commemorative book and full-length documentary film.
